The enemy raided a post, to the north-east of Hamcourt, and also under cover of the fog, captured an advanced post, to the east of Mesennes.
We drove off raiders, to the north-east of Armentieres, and to the north of the Menin Road.
We inflicted many casualties in patrol encounters, to the south-east of Cambrai.
The artillery was active, on both sides, at Bullecourt, and the enemy artillery was increasingly active, to the south-east of Ypres.
Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig states there is nothing to report.
STRONG ENEMY ATTACK IN LORRAINE FAILS.
London, Dec. 21.
A French communiqué states that the "We" offensive reciprocal artillery activity, on the whole front, a strong enemy attack in Lorraine, preceded by a violent bombardment of the trenches, to the north of Eillon, completely failed, and enemy reinforcements were repulsed. LONDON LETTER.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

London, October 25.

LABOUR AMBITIONS.

It has been clear, ever since Mr. Arthur Henderson broke with the Cabinet, that the Labour Party had ambitions to dominate the political situation after the war. There is no gainsaying that the outstanding effect of the war has been to give democracy a fuller notion of its potential powers, and to make all monarchs feel uneasy on their thrones. We have had the Tsar and King Tino dismissed, and the King of Spain is none too secure in his place. So the Labour politicians think they see their chance. They expect that the soldiers will come back with new ideas of social necessities and the women will be discontented with conditions as they were before the war opened up new opportunities to them. As women are to vote under the new franchise reform law there will be this double field of new recruits for the Labour forces. So now it is proposed to organise the Labour Party on a dual basis—first, as national trade union societies, for the regulation of industrial matters; and secondly, in the constituencies, for the domination of politics. Mr. Arthur Henderson is said to have ambitions to be the new Labour Premier, and there are many people of cool heads and little sympathy with the movement who are ready to concede that the scheme may succeed. In the constituencies all the men and women who are in favour of the Labour programme will be eligible for enrolment. They declare the aim is to organise all the producers of the country, whether by hand or brain, regardless of class or occupation.

To what extent the Ramsay MacDonald element will have influence in the new order of things cannot be foreseen, but I think myself they will be restrained, and there need not be any grave misgivings about the developments if such men as George Barnes and John Hodge have a guiding voice in the policies. There can be no doubt that actual responsibility in office calms down the wildest independent character.

The new National Party that was to sweep away the established parties, has not made a good start, though it was backed by General Price, Lord Charles Bessborough and others of equal prominence. In East Islington their candidate, a good fighter too, Mr. E. B. Barnard, only got 518 votes, with the Coalition candidate, Mr. Smallwood, away over 2,000, and Pemberton Billing's tame candidate, Mr. Baker, about 1,500 behind. The cry of the electors was for "Pepisals," but that did not lead them to clasp the Billing type of politician to their bosoms, in spite of that worthy's megaphonic screeching for aerial activity. Taking into account the fact that Islington has suffered as much as any part from air raids, the election shows that people are not to be rushed out of their accustomed method of regarding politics; and the new "nationals" and "vigilantes" have yet to show their worth before they can gain the confidence of the majority.

SHIPPING DIFFICULTIES.

A well-informed correspondent writes:—"Apart from the strikes in Australian waters that are interfering seriously with the movement of ships, the shortage of ocean carriers is being acutely felt, and I understand that enormous quantities of wheat and wool are now stored in the Commonwealth. There is much bitter complaint about the use to which the vessels bought by Mr. Hughes during his visit to London last year are being put. It was understood—and it was, indeed, a condition of both their purchase and their transfer to another registry—that they would be kept running between the Commonwealth and Allied Ports in Europe, but it is known that most of them are employed in the Indian and American trades as freighters above. Blue Book rates. In South Africa, too, there is trouble over the shipment of goods overseas, and even if negotiations are concluded between the Imperial authorities and the farmers for the purchase of the 1917-18 wool clip, it is believed that much of it will have to be kept at Union ports. In view, however, of the increasing military demands, the Army Council, I learn, is anxious to accumulate a large reserve of wool in the United Kingdom as soon as possible to meet all contingencies, and although stocks in hand are sufficient for present purposes, it is likely that a great effort will be made to provide the necessary transport facilities."

In regard to the wool demand, I may add that civilian requirements are likely to be still further restricted, for England is to make the cloth and the uniforms for the American Army.

PEACE MOVES.

The declaration of Sir Edward Carson and other responsible members of our Cabinet this week that the struggle until victory is necessary, and that Germany's naval and economic blockade must be broken, is a strong statement of the Government's efforts to get peace on terms favourable to herself, while Austria and Turkey are sick of the war. It is believed here that Germany's aim is a peace on the basis of the abandonment of all territories occupied in the West, provided some scope is granted to our foe to expand in the Near East. It is a clever move, for since the collapse of Russia, the Powers, apart from England, are not much interested in the regions east of Montenegro and the Hun is calculating on war-weariness. But there is at present great cordiality between the Allies, so the intriguing Hun will be disappointed. "No peace with the Hohenzollerns" continues to be the watchword. I do not personally believe the war will go through next summer, and I am disposed to agree with Mr. Winston Churchill, that the sword will swing back to its scabbard as suddenly as it was drawn. I know of men in public life who are betting on peace within a few months, but I think the bad weather is against that, for it is hindering the Anglo-French forces from advancing as rapidly as they otherwise would.

What it is like at the Front is shown in this fragment from a letter just received in England, "Noise we have grown used to mud we thought we had wallowed in; but the mire now baffles belief. It is a far more formidable enemy than the foe, and one of the problems it presents is the difficulty of recovering our wounded. That men should be hit is a natural part of the war, but it is not expected that a wounded man should sink where he has fallen and have to be dug out of the mud, which sometimes is nearly up to his shoulders, before he can be brought in. My memory of the war will be gone and horribly insecure ground."

"A gas for a week would, in fact, do a double good, for it would dry the ground at once, and destroy the advantage to the foe of the 'Hunters Moon'."
